LEGO EDUCATION LAUNCHES SPIKE PRIME TO TEACH ENGINEERING AND ROBOTICS TO KIDS

Lego Education is launching a new line to teach engineering and robotics concepts to kids in a celebration of sorts for the STEAM-focused toy division's 40th anniversary. Called Spike Prime, the new education system is aimed at students ages 10 and up, from sixth to eighth grade. Lego Education, an education-focused division of the iconic building toy manufacturer, first announced the system last April and is rolling out on Jan. 14. Each Spike Prime kit sells for $329.95 and can be used by two or three kids in a class setting to solve engineering, programming and other challenges from one of 32 different lesson plans. Those lesson plans are organized in four teaching units with names like Kickstarter Business or Invention Squad, and are included in a free Spike Prime app. Lego Education stands apart from Lego's entertainment toy division precisely because it aims to engage kids in the world around them. Source: Space.com

What is the best way to stick to a new year resolution? - Peetha Murthy, CMS College

Dear Preetha,

New year is a time, when we start a fresh chapter in our life and make new plans and set new goals. Everyone can make resolutions but what is important that you stay consistent and stick to it. Hence here is my advice to help you stick to your new year plans.

- Make plans which are achievable, specific and measurable. Making big plans might feel like a big achievement but if its not measurable and relevant, the plan is destined to fail. Hence make small plans which are time bound as every small success will take you further closer to your big plan in life,
- Pick one resolution at a time: most people tend to make too many resolutions at a time, and fail to keep up with any of the one of the same. Hence it is important that you pick one important resolution which you seek to achieve and move towards it step by step.
- Rome cannot be built in a day, similar is the case of achieving a goal. Hence it is must that you plan the steps to achieve your goal and take time to analyze your steps.

Always remember that Change is a process, which slowly develops into a habit. Hence make sure that you are consistent and have the will to achieve your goals. Get a solid support from your friends and family and reward yourself when you achieve your goals, this will not just boast your self confidence but also help you stay motivated. Wish you all the best for achieving your goals!
