ASK THE EXPERT

I have trouble talking to my peers, and I feel that is maybe because I am an introvert. How can I improve on my social skills? - Arnold Bunn, Al Dhafra Private School, Abu Dhabi

Hi Arnold,

Well, most of us face this trouble of socially mingling with people who are new to us, which can inturn harm our social life and career as well. Hence, I advise you to take one step at a time. Try mingling with your peers and do not let anxiety hold you back. Start with some open ended questions and invite others to keep the conversation going. Paying attention to your body language is very important, and stay up to date with the latest happenings across the globe as this will help you express your views better and start interesting discussions in the group.

Listening is also a key aspect of improving social skills, connect one to one with people and make note of the interesting stories they have to tell, ask questions and follow your gut, But last but not the least love and respect people, and remember to keep that smile intact on your face, as a SMILE CAN HELP YOU CONQUER THE WORLD.
